In this section of the NCADD website, we share with you the various ways that an individual or organization can help people confront addiction by defining the problem and providing solutions, leading to a better way of living.

HELP US.... fight Ignorance, Stigma and overcome discrimination.

HELP US.... help individuals and families support prevention, get help, find treatment and support.

HELP US.... influence national and state legislative policy.

HELP US.... better understand alcoholism and drug addiction as a disease and support recovery.

HELP US.... establish a presence in every community across the country.

Bill Wilson, the co-founder of Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), wrote:

“Then came Marty Mann, NCADD’s founder. As a recovered alcoholic, she knew that public attitudes had to be changed, that alcoholism was a disease and that alcoholics could be helped. She developed an idea for an organization to conduct a vigorous plan of public education and to organize citizens’ committees all over the country. She brought the plan to me. I was enthusiastic.”

Bill Wilson was also tremendously supportive of the organization. He became a donor, a policy advocate, a member of the NCADD Board of Directors and a volunteer counselor. Bill set the stage for the involvement of thousands of NCADD contributors throughout the organization's 70 year-history.
